REPORT

Date	Venue	Seminar: Research Methodology
30.3.2019	Seminar Hall	Professor Rajsekhar Basu, University of Calcutta, Kolkata, discussed the following points: The 'Cambridge School' is the name given to a group of historians in Cambridge who reinterpreted Indian politics in the age of nationalism. They did not think that there was any fundamental contradiction between imperialism and nationalism. In their opinion, local interests and factional rivalries were prominent features of the history of Indian nationalism. If Indian nationalism emerged despite such localized rivalries, this happened because the British authorities simultaneously centralized the government and introduced representation in the course of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Government intrusion in local concerns forced local politicians to turn to the centre. Paradoxically, Indian nationalism was the product of the government impulse. The Nationalist school originated among Indian historians in the late 19th and early 20th centuries who were influenced by Indian nationalism. They emphasized achievements in Indian history, while downplaying negative aspects, which led to various contradictions. In India, Marxist Historiography takes the form of Marxian historiography where Marxian techniques of analysis are used but Marxist political intentions and prescriptions are discarded. The Marxian historiography of India uses the materialism and has focused on studies of economic development, land owners class conflict in precolonial deindustrialization during the colonial period. S.N.Dutta, and D.D. Kosambi are considered the founding fathers of Marxist historiography in India. The other Indian scholars of Marxian historiography are D.N.Jha, Irfan Habib, Romila Thapar, Bipan Chandra and many others. The "subaltern school", was begun in the 1980s by Ranajit Guha and Gyan Prakash. It focuses attention away from the elites and politicians to "history from below", looking at the peasants using folklore, poetry, riddles, proverbs, songs, oral history and methods inspired by anthropology.
